investigate. As soon as they left I thought about getting out, however, I didn't want to risk getting caught so I held these for the next four hours.
Still frozen I'm ashamed to admit but during those four hours I jumped at every creak or slightly higher noise.
After those four hours it started to get dark so I prepared to get out. I haven't heard the soldier coming back so that either meant they went a different way or was still on their way back and could see me coming out.
But I took my chances and thankfully nobody was there to get me. I then started looking for a spot to set up fire so I wouldn't freeze to death during the night. So now I'm sitting next to a campfire I set up, unable to even stand properly. So I think I'll go to sleep and see how I'm feeling tomorrow. There is still a long way in front of me.

My name is Theo, and I was born in Raymore. From a young age, I was fascinated with mythical and legendary beings. This was mainly due to my grandfather, who was obsessed with these things, and it was really much all he could talk about. He told me stories about three-headed dogs, snake-eyed humans, flying horses, snake-haired women, and many more.
The number of stories he could tell seemed endless, but there was one story that stood out from the rest. The story spoke about the Titans. For decades, these beings reigned over the world, second only to the gods.
Their influence fueled their ego to the point of waging a war against the Pantheon, only to be crushed and forced to obey until death. The Pantheon was an assembly of thousands of beings, all with different purposes, some more vital than others, serving each other

"Once you start to understand the contents, you can manipulate them or you can change them however you want and even merge them with mechanical elements or human to an animal. It really is just an application and that's how you can be more free when you draw to deliver your ideas."

A dark, atmospheric scene featuring a large, glowing, curved object on a rocky island in the middle of a dark sea under a cloudy sky. The object is illuminated from behind, creating a bright glow. The sea is dark with subtle ripples, and the sky is filled with soft, grey clouds.

REGIMER

Long buried legends, reawakened by the curiosity of man. Their return was never optional.
